Short Range Forecast Discussion

NWS Weather Prediction Center College Park MD

216 PM EST Sun Dec 08 2024

Valid 00Z Mon Dec 09 2024 - 00Z Wed Dec 11 2024

The last vestiges of cold air are being dispelled out of New England for the remainder of today into tonight with some lingering snow showers still possible across far Interior New England. Clearing skies and return flow ahead of the Pacific System sliding through the Rockies, combining with warmer/moist air returning out of the Western Gulf ahead of an average upper-level trough; will result in well above temperatures today across the Northern Plains and Midwest, shifting to the eastern half of the country on Monday, and finally east of the Mississippi into Tuesday ahead of the Pacific cold front. Today, 20-30 degree departures will exist in the Plains and temper a bit to 15-25 degrees above normal overnight through Tuesday morning. Increased moisture through the lower Mississippi River Valley will have some stronger showers and possible thunderstorms closer to the Gulf of Mexico. Rain-rates may result in a few widely scattered incidents of flooding across the Delta Region into SW LA today, shunting south to the Central Gulf Coast Monday into Tuesday. The Weather Prediction Center has issued a Marginal Risk for today; and upgrades to a Slight Risk (level 2 of 4) on Tuesday across south-central LA to Mobile Bay mainly for risks near susceptible urban locations along I-10/12.

The aforementioned Pacific airmass/frontal zone has cross much of the northern Rockies and has already developed a stronger surface low just north of the U.S. Canada border. Associated strong winds and snows from overnight is resulting in dangerous travel conditions across E Montana with a Blizzard Warning still in affect across far east-central MT until 6 pm MST today. Downstream warm air advection will over-top some remaining colder air across northern MN into the Western Great Lakes tonight. Winter Storm Warnings and Advisories are in effect across the norther Red River Valley into northern MN where 4-7" of snow are expected. Strong onshore flow off Lake Superior will further enhance local snow totals across the Arrowhead of MN range with 9-12"+ totals expected.
