Singapore is a country located in the South-East Asia and attracts tourists as a result of many favorable factors. It was projected in 2006 that the number of tourist visitors to Singapore would continue to improve as the trend in the past years. Tourism plays a significant role in the economy of Singapore. Singapore had projected to reach a target of 9.4 million visitors into the country in the year 2006 and attained a level of 4.7 million visitors from January to July the same year. Singapore has become a center of tourism, communication as well as trade partly because of its geographical location between Indian Ocean and South China Sea. This location can be termed as strategic and helps in attracting tourists from around the world. The most popular tourist attractions in Singapore are Night Safari, Singapore Zoo and Sentosa.

Cultural factors have also played an important role in ensuring that the tourism industry is sustained or improved in Singapore. Singapore enjoys being a multicultural country in contrast to Malaysia, because there are three main races, namely Indian (8.69% of the population), Malay (13.6% of the population), and Chinese (75.5% of the population). The cultural diversity reflects the history of Singapore since colonial times. Cultural diversity in a country is very essential because different cultures have a different taste including different foods, clothing, language and festivals. Differences in food tastes for example have made it possible for the local cuisine to avail different foods with different prices for all budget categories. In addition to this variety of food tastes, the government arranges for celebration of multicultural cuisine in Singapore annually in the Singapore Food Festival held in July every year. This festival has helped attract tourists in the country. In addition, organizing a project to light up the cities in Singapore during festivals like the Chinese New Year and Christmas, has played a role in attracting tourists in the country. Cultural flavors represent the taste of a certain country.
