A wedding reception is a party held after the completion of a marriage ceremony. It is held as hospitality for those who have attended the wedding: the couple receives society, in the form of family and friends, for the first time as a married couple. Hosts provide their choice of food and drink, although a wedding cake is popular. Entertaining guests after a wedding ceremony is traditional in most societies, and can last anywhere from half an hour to many hours or even days.

In some cultures, separate wedding celebrations are held for the bride's and groom's families.

Until after World War II, wedding celebrations were most commonly held in the bride's home, in whatever style of entertainment within the means of the family. class families. The choice depended primarily on the family's economic situation. At the beginning of the 20th century, dance halls became common, and were rented by those planning a celebration beyond what their homes could hold. Typical locations for wedding celebrations now include hotel ballrooms, banquet halls, wedding venues, community halls, social halls at the church or other sacred place where the wedding ceremony took place, and, particularly for smaller weddings, restaurants and garden parties at home.
